"It is the state's burden to prove knowledge of the unlawfulness of the act, not [the defendant's]." Johnson, 823 N.W.2d at 728. Brown's drug transaction with a police informant occurred in a parking lot of a bar that Brown had frequented in the past and that he described as "close." Brown was not a stranger to the informant, and according to the informant, they had been "doing drugs" together for a long time. While Brown and the informant conversed alone at the parking lot, Detective Otto's unmarked squad car was parked nearby. Under these circumstances, the trial court could reasonably find by a preponderance
